You are required to have immunity and serology testing as part of the application process for acceptance into the programme. You must supply the following evidence of serology and vaccination results:

- A blood test that gives results for Hepatitis B Surface Antigen and Surface Antibody within the last five years. You need this even if you have been immunised against Hepatitis B.

- You must provide evidence of having had a Pertussis (whooping cough) vaccination within the last five years. If you cannot provide the evidence you will need a vaccination against Pertussis.

Tuberculosis (TB) Screening (may be Mantoux test or Quantiferon Gold blood test)

Pre-employment screening of health care personnel aims to:

- Detect active TB
- Identify those with latent TB disease

Mantoux test

- The two step test should be performed
- The first reading should be taken 72 hours after Mantoux injection and it must be measured on the long axis of the arm and reported in mm's. e.g. 0 mm.
- Retesting should occur one week after first test
- The second reading should be taken 48 hours after injection and it must be measured on the long axis of the arm and reported in mm's. e.g. 5 mm.
- The two tests must not be given in exactly the same site because it can result in increased reaction size

If the Mantoux test is positive then a chest x-ray and further laboratory tests will be required (at your own cost). These may include Hepatitis B, C and HIV

Quantiferon TB Gold

This is a blood test called test. This blood test measures the cell immune response of TB infected individuals. The result of this test is not affected by previous BCG vaccination which some people may have had in the past.

Following acceptance to the programme:

- Methicillin Resistant Staphlococcus Aureus (MRSA):

MRSA is a multi-resistant organism which is difficult to treat once established.
